Graduate Students

Cao Xiyue (China)

“The excellent professors, friendly students, as well as the active academic atmosphere come together in creating a wonderful research platform. Thanks to CNM, I have a chance to research in the collective action of social networks, especially in microblogging, which is my current research interest.”

Andrew Duffy (UK)

“It cannot be easy having a mature student from a neighbouring university in your class, but the CNM professors did not bat an eyelid. The debate and discussion in each class are lively and stimulating, opening new views of thought and empathy. In a global classroom it becomes second nature to think from an international perspective, and exchanging ideas with classmates and professors has been helpful.”

Kund Florian (Hungary)

“I used to research and teach in the field of development co-operation. My interest in the potential of new media for public diplomacy and nation branding brought me back to university where I am working on my dissertation on nation branding in Singapore and the Czech Republic. CNM has given me full support in realizing my interdisciplinary and application-focused research goals.”

Gulizar Haciyakupoglu (Turkey)

“My research focuses on the impact of social media on democratic decision-making and research on political participation. Although this is my first semester as a Ph.D. student, the interdisciplinary backgrounds of CNM faculty and the support of my peers have made the journey a rewarding experience.”

Hui Lee Jhoe (Singapore)

“Getting from a background in chemistry, it was not easy for me to adapt to the perspectives of the social sciences. However, I was pleased by my professors on potential contributions of video gaming in Singapore after many years of training and counseling problematic video gamers and their families. More importantly, supervisors were helpful, kind and encouraging, which made my journey possible – and more pleasant.”

Mao Chengfang (China)

“In the past four years, I have seen myself transformed into a competent and versatile learner. I have gained a lot from the modules, research projects and the inspiring professors in CNM. Doing research in humanities broadens my perspectives, brings my thoughts and deepen my vision — which helps to prepare myself to join academia.”

Anuradha Rao (India)

“The mentoring that I have received has been valuable in my transition from policy researcher to academic. Guidance from professors helped situate my research within the key theoretical debates and challenge me to bring my ideas to a higher level of theorization. CNM strives to create a stimulating learning environment among a multicultural community of people with varied professional interests. It is a collegial environment where Ph.D. students can establish ourselves as independent researchers!”

Cheryll Soriano (Philippines)

“The environment that CNM provides has been invaluable to my research. I have been privileged to interact with other scholars and professors, and administrate staff. The opportunity to present one’s research at various conferences around the world is part of the vast range of experiences that CNM provides for graduate students.”

Jiow Hee Jhee (Singapore)

“The multi-disciplinary nature of CNM is the perfect environment for someone who has a broad interest in social research. I have a thesis supervisor whose intellectual flexibility is both invigorating as well as inspiring. In my research on youth citizenship and new media, I have been fortunate to interact with experienced academics who have generously shared their research and writing opportunities. I remain intellectually stimulated, emotionally supported and socially enriched.”
